The International Association of Scientific, Technical and Medical Publishers ("STM") comprises approximately 100 publishers of journals and reference works, based in 26 countries, including many Member States of the European Union. EU-based publishers publish 49% of all research articles worldwide (STM's members make a Euro 3 billion contribution to the EU's balance of trade.) STM publishers disseminate journal content, books and reference works, and databases, in a variety of forms including print and online, and in addition provide systems that enable access to individual articles and contributions (hereinafter: "Content") of a multitude of European and international scientific, medical and technical authors and scholars. This creative Content is available widely in electronic and in print form for access by individuals, whether through academic and corporate libraries or directly, for use in research, education, in industry, the professions and business.

STM welcomes this opportunity to make its submissions as parts of the "EU IPR survey 2010 on IPR protection and enforcement in third countries". STM's submissions focus on the following countries: Brazil, China, India, Mexico, South
